Darwin in the 21st Century: Nature, Humanity, and God

November 1–3, 2009

University of Notre Dame Center for Continuing Education
McKenna Hall, Notre Dame, Indiana, USA

Conference Goals

- examine the present state of theoretical discussion of evolutionary theory within the biological sciences
- reflect on the future directions of evolutionary theory through interdisciplinary discussions by scientists, social scientists, philosophers of science, and theologians
- explore issues of evolutionary theory that influence our understanding of human nature
- develop interdisciplinary dialogue involving theology, philosophy, and evolutionary biology to form new perspectives on evolutionary science, Christian humanism, and the theology of creation

Call for Papers

20 minute contributed papers on topics of relevance to the conference themes will be accepted for simultaneous sessions on November 2 and 3. Abstracts of 200 words and brief C.V.s are due by June 12, with notification of acceptance by June 19. Abstracts and proposals should be emailed to nd.reilly.31@nd.edu.
